Keep On Going...

We are already celebrating the third edition of the PinchukArtCentre Prize. It all began in the autumn of 2009, with the prize for young Ukrainian artists up to 35 years old, which in the meantime has achieved a significant profile. The best young artists in our country can apply, but at the same time, because it is an open competition, new discoveries are always being made. Now, in 2013, it is apparent how important Victor Pinchuk’s endowment of the prize has been, and how important it is to continue a long-term and sustainable investment in the younger generation.

If at the beginning the focus was mainly on the art scene in Kyiv, there now are applications from all regions of the country. A new generation is rapidly establishing itself, developing its own artistic language at the borders between national identity and international challenges.

The PinchukArtCentre has meanwhile become the important partner for this young generation. We have developed a complex framework to provide them with support. It includes regular meetings at PAC with artists from the regions and advice on art projects, in particular for those artists nominated for the prize. In brief, PAC carries out an intensive dialogue with artists throughout the year, even investing in new productions. It should also be mentioned that the winner of the PinchukArtCentre Prize is automatically nominated for the Future Generation Art Prize. Only recently the presentation Future Generation Art Prize@Venice 2013 has again demonstrated how important and challenging such a link is for the young art scene in Ukraine.

Another wide-ranging annual programme is now approaching its end; it has included important solo exhibitions by Tony Oursler and Jake and Dinos Chapman, the ongoing Collection Platforms and the impressive thematic exhibition China China, which have been accompanied by a multitude of parallel projects. Additionally, there has also been a fully developed Education Programme, in cooperation with numerous local and international partners, demonstrating that PinchukArtCentre speaks to artists and the public more intensely than ever before.

ECKHARD SCHNEIDER
20 Shortlisted Artists

The PinchukArtCentre Prize, now in its third edition, is the first national contemporary art prize to discover, recognize and give long-term support to a new generation of Ukrainian artists. It has proved to be an important contribution to the open participation of younger artists in the dynamic development of Ukraine. Founded in 2009 by the Victor Pinchuk Foundation, the prize is dedicated to all emerging artists up to the age of 35. The relevant key aspects are:

- a national dimension
- the focus on a young generation of artists
- an open democratic application procedure
- a high level of artistic expertise
- the commitment of international artists
- a distinguished jury and selection committee.

An independent pre-selection committee has selected 20 shortlisted artists who are now showing their work at the PinchukArtCentre.

An international jury will award one main prize and three special prizes. The winners will receive a cash award of 100,000 Hryvnya (12,100 US dollars) for the main prize and 25,000 Hryvnya (3,000 US dollars) for each special prize, all winners will also be awarded residences in the studios of internationally renowned artists. The main prize winner will automatically be selected as a shortlisted artist for the Future Generation Art Prize 2014.

Yevgenia Belorusets

YEVENIA BELORUSETS was born 1980 in Kyiv, Ukraine. She lives and works in Kyiv and Berlin. Belorusets received a master’s degree in literature from Kyiv National Linguistic University, a diploma in documentary photography from the Viktor Maruschenko Photography School and completed a PhD seminar group at Vienna University. Belorusets founded the journal for literature and art Prostory in 2008 and became a member of the curatorial group Hudrada in 2009.

Using the strategies of investigative journalism, Yevgenia Belorusets deeply infiltrates her chosen subjects, creating highly selective documentary reports of real-life topics. Her photographs are narrative, semi-composed images, which reflect and represent hidden social realities and complex social structures.

For PAC, Belorusets has made multiple trips into the Carpathians, a mountain region known for its unspoiled natural beauty and traditional way of life. Her project developed into an intriguing photographic journey enriched with textual elements: a portrait of life in this part of Ukraine that reveals an unexpected hardness. The people portrayed seem in danger of being deprived of their pride and dignity, imprisoned by folkloric traditions.
ANATOLIY BELOV was born 1977 in Kyiv, Ukraine, where he currently lives and works. He received degrees from the Republican Taras Shevchenko Art School and the National Technical University of Ukraine. He has been a member of the artists groups R.E.P., Penoplast and Emblika Quali. Belov participated in residencies of the Centre for Contemporary Art founded by George Soros in Kyiv (2005) and the Rotor association for contemporary art in Graz (2009).

SEX, MEDICAL, ROCK 'N' ROLL, 2012, acrylic and ink on canvas, 110 x 150 cm

Through his drawings and paintings, Anatoliy Belov reveals an uncensored freedom of fictional and autobiographical narratives, developing a world of unbridled sexual exploration. Using the artistic medium as a weapon in the personal struggle of a homosexual within a closed homophobic society, Belov appears as a lost romantic dreaming of freedom and love.

With a new work produced by PAC, Belov makes a leap in his artistic oeuvre, combining for the first time his practices as a writer, musician and visual artist into a “short-film musical”. This film, a romantic story of love and failure, becomes the poetic expression of an existing underground subculture loaded with emotional and political awareness.
Daniil Galkin

Daniil Galkin was born 1985 in Dnepropetrovsk, Ukraine, where he currently lives and works. After receiving a degree from the Theatre-Arts College and Academy of Construction and Architecture, he has been working as the 2222 experimental art group, which was nominated for the Kandinsky Award in 2013. Galkin is a winner of the Grand Prix of MUHI-2011 and has been nominated for PinchukArtCentre Prize in 2011 and the Kuryokhin Award in 2012.

Daniil Galkin has founded the one-man collective 2222 to represent his general artistic practice. Each 2 is standing for a ministry (Ministry of Peace, Spirituality, Health and Love), which he translates into a series of installations, videos or interventions.

At PAC Galkin shows Tourniquette, a new, site-specific work built from a multitude of turnstiles to force the public into a passage grid. Visitors are subjected to a regulated direction of traffic, with a defined speed limit, allowing one person at a time to pass through. In this way, Galkin creates a useless systematic carousel, related to Franz Kafka’s masterwork The Trial.
As a printmaker, Oleg Gryshchenko continues a language rooted within traditional Ukrainian decorative arts and transforms it through the use of fragmented texts and sometimes by exposing his prints to nature, laying them outside for a restricted period of time.

For PAC, Gryshchenko creates a project called The Great Ukrainian Wall, a large-scale woodcut print matrix, combined with 4200 printed sheets from the 200 prints forming the original woodcut, which the audience is invited to take home. The overall image of Great Ukrainian Wall combines a study of Ukrainian traditions, literature, landscapes and personal memories. It could be a metaphor for the challenge that faces Ukraine, to re-discover and preserve a national heritage without holding back social, cultural and political change.
Andriy Hir

ANDRIY HIR was born 1988 in Uzhhorod, Ukraine. He lives and works in Lviv. Hir received a diploma in architecture from the Lviv Polytechnic National University. From 2005 onward, he has participated in solo and group exhibitions such as the NeoFolk project at the Gogolfest in Kyiv and the Art Moscow (both in 2012). Hir works in painting, street art, folklore, poetry and design.

Andriy Hir’s wall paintings draw from spiritual narratives, which he researches to trace them back past their known origin. He then transforms them according to his personal beliefs and morals into abstracted paintings populated by strange, unearthly creatures.

For PAC, Hir creates a new mural originating from the biblical story of Noah’s Ark. Following his special artistic practice, he transforms this story into an iconic image in which unidentifiable creatures represent metaphors for what might be the world of today, the past or the future.
DOBRINYA IVANOV was born 1987 in Kyiv, Ukraine, where he currently lives and works. He studied at the studio of painter Alexander Babak, but ended up mostly making sculptures and installations. Since 2009 he is a participant of the Genofond programme for young Ukrainian art organized by Ya Gallery in Kyiv. In 2011, he took part in the Genofond Pinakothek at the Titanikas Exhibition Halls of the Vilnius Academy of Arts and other exhibitions. In 2013 he was nominated for the Henkel Art Award and became artist in residence at Kyiv Air.

Dobrinya Ivanov collects both real and fictive narratives that are connected to found objects. In combining the objects, he develops a storyline that is dealing with the idea of “true” and “false”. In his current artistic practice these “true and false narratives” become a part of questioning his own artistic approach.

At PAC, Ivanov will present a special project where he collects and creates objects after a series of conversations that will continue throughout the exhibition, reflecting on his methodology as an artist.
Zhanna Kadyrova has developed a distinctive sculptural language for mapping spaces (in the broadest sense of the word). The materials she works with emphasize the fractured nature of her objects, which are related to and reflect upon the social context of the everyday.

For PAC Kadyrova takes a new step in her artistic practice, resuming the lost tradition of mosaics, which can be found in public spaces all over the former Soviet Union. Those mosaics had an educational use, advocating morals and values. Adopting the same material and artistic language, Kadyrova transforms them by bringing them inside the gallery. Her work reflects critically on the changed use of images inside the public space and the decaying heritage of former soviet traditions.
The paintings of Olesia Khomenko are narrative reflections on subjects such as the proletarian hero and post-soviet space, landscape and architecture.

For her project at PAC, Khomenko takes a new step in her artistic practice, presenting an animation video made from her paintings. The video shows the face of a mother who pretends falling asleep over her child. Khomenko places the viewer in the role of the child by projecting the animation onto the single large-scale canvas used to paint the faces. Through the canvas, she maintains the memory of painting and gives a physical depth to the projected animation.
Alina Kopitsya

ALINA KOPITSYA was born 1983 in Poliske in the Kyiv region, Ukraine. She lives and works in Boyarka in the Kyiv region. Kopitsya received her diploma in graphic arts from the National Kyiv Polytechnic Institute. Since 2008 she has been working in upcycling art and participated in the International Recycling Art Festival of Catalonia, Barcelona, and the On the Street festival in Istanbul.

Gender relations, sexual behaviour and fetishism are subjects of the textiles, sculptures and performances of Alina Kopitsya. With an uncomplicated, humoristic approach her provocative work addresses social taboos, unveiling the possibility of a passionate sexual drive free from gender-political relations and social expectations. Kopitsya’s project at the PAC presents a new erotic sculpture, a black silicon sphinx, together with a performance that invites the audience into a sublimated sexual game. The installation deals with the possible innocence and playfulness of sexuality, its infiltration of our daily life in daily encounters and its underlying liberating capacity.
Mariia Kulykivska

MARIIA KULYKIVSKA was born 1988 in Kerch, Ukraine. She lives and works in Kyiv. Kulykivska received a master’s degree of architecture from the National Academy of Art and Architecture, Kyiv. She was the winner of several contests such as the RutaRuna Project for young artists from Ukraine and Sweden (2013), In Search of Spaces of Negotiation by Foundation CSM (2012), the Swiss non-profit organization AKKU (2011–2012), MUHI-2010 at the Bottega Gallery in Kyiv and many others. She currently teaches the visual culture of contemporary art to children at the PinchukArtCentre.

The nucleus of Mariia Kulykivska’s work is her own body, its perpetuation, its transformation and its decay. Throughout her young oeuvre the idea of her body has transformed into architectural structures made from natural materials, such as salt, milk or sugar, dealing with ideas of production, construction and de-construction. For PAC, Kulykivska creates a new sculpture made of self-produced salt bricks she uses to construct a landscape of 25 pillars, which by the very nature of the material and production will be in continuous decay.
Oleksandr Kurmaz

OLEKSANDR KURMAZ was born 1986 in Poltava, Ukraine. He lives and works in Kyiv. Kurmaz graduated from the design department at the Ukrainian State Academy of Art in Kyiv. He was a finalist of the Kazimir Malevich Award, artist in residence of the Izolyatsia foundation, Donetsk, and the Artitude Kunstverein, Berlin. He had a solo exhibition in Warsaw in 2010, and participated in the RutaRuna Project for young artists from Ukraine and Sweden and the Must Art campaign in Minsk (both 2013).

Oleksandr Kurmaz started his artistic practice as a graffiti artist. When he gradually left the medium behind, he kept public space as his main domain and continued to use underground strategies of hijacking public space branded by advertisement and private commercial messages. In most of his work he plays a game of de-powering power structures, using both humoristic and conceptual interventions.

During the exhibition at PAC, Kurmaz claims both the exhibition venue and the Besarabska market hall and its surroundings. By a series of interventions, Kurmaz confuses the private and public space, cracking open the set expectations of the passer-by.
Roman Minin was born 1981 in Dimitrov in the Donetsk region, Ukraine. He lives and works in Kharkiv. Minin graduated from the Kharkov Academy of Design and Arts in 2008. In 2009 he received the Talent and Vocation medal from the worldwide alliance Peacemaker. He has participated in many group exhibitions and festivals, organizes the Street Art Fest in Kharkov and was head of the programme Isoliatsya in city space in the Isoliatsya centre of the modern art in Donetsk 2012.

The Donetsk region, where Roman Minin was born, is identified by mining. For the people living there it is not only an industry but a way of life. Minin has taken that as the main subject of his paintings and stained-glass windows, a metaphor for a closed social system that allows no way out. With The Plan of Escape from the Donetsk Region, Minin created his own artistic escape route from that imprisonment.

The exhibition at PAC allows Minin to take an essential step in combining his artistic practice as painter with his social engagement. The Plan of Escape from the Donetsk Region will be combined with a specially commissioned work by children from the region. They will (for the first time in their lives) travel to Kyiv to paint their own plan of escape.
Lada Nakonechna was born 1981 in Dnepropetrovsk, Ukraine. She lives and works in Kyiv. Nakonechna graduated from the National Academy of Fine Art and Architecture in Kyiv and has exhibited extensively both in Ukraine and abroad. She is a member of the R.E.P. artist group and co-founder of ISTM (Art Workers’ Self-Defence Initiative) and Hudrada groups. She was shortlisted for the PinchukArtCentre Prize 2009.

INVESTIGATION OF MECHANISMS OF MANIPULATION #1, 2009, cardboard, lamp, pencil drawing, 35 x 32 x 30 cm each

Lada Nakonechna’s carefully crafted graphite pencil drawings construct meticulous and sometimes abstract landscapes that through their production process reflect on the physical context of the social environment each drawing is made in.

At PAC, Nakonechna builds a wall that touches neither the floor nor the ceiling. By the act of drawing on it she makes the wall visually disappear. In this work, Nakonechna points the attention of the viewer to the position of the artist as a manipulator of space and a regulator of perception. A photo of the manipulated space hangs inside adding complexity and confusion.
Through video, sculpture and installation, Mykola Ridnyi performs a critical reflection on the socio-political context of the post-soviet environment. His artistic statements are often constructed using a combination of documentary films with traditional figurative sculptures and found objects.

For PAC, Ridnyi creates a new installation dealing with the position of police authority and its power within Ukrainian society. The work balances between a critical representation of power structures and the personal narrative of a former policeman who now works as a sculptor. Sculptures of military boots are shown together with small videos of protest and a disarming interview with the former policeman.
In his work, Ivan Svitlychnyi researches sound as sculpture. During the first stages of a production, he experiments with objects and creates the basis for a sculptural sound through their form. Abstract physical sculptures define the travel of sound and the reception of the sound by the viewer. Continuing his research through performances and actions in specific spaces, Svitlychnyi now redefines the possibilities of this process to create sound as a sculptural experience.

For PAC, Svitlychnyi creates a continually changing sculptural sound portrait of the twenty spaces where the shortlist exhibition takes place. The sound in each room is registered live, transformed by a sound matrix and played back into his exhibition space.
Volodymyr Vorotniov started his artistic practice on the street using graffiti as his medium. His work is focused on mapping and demarking spaces to emphasize existing aspects in the street and create abstract visual compositions.

In his research Vorotniov explores what he calls “the language spoken by the street” and with his project for PAC he brings this language inside an institutional context. He creates a composed street situation inside the gallery space using a series of found street objects which are all partially painted white from the ground upwards. With this work he refers to the yearly Ukrainian tradition to paint trees and street borders white to welcome spring season and look forward to the summer.
With a keen sense for drawing and for use of materials, Anna Zvyagintseva captures traces of daily life, encounters, coincidences or autobiographical facts in her sculptures, drawings and film works. Her young oeuvre takes the form of an intuitive diary preserving moments, ideas and actions, which otherwise would be lost.

For PAC, Zvyagintseva has chosen one of the hundreds of drawings she made of daily household labour such as washing dishes. She has selected a fragment of that drawing and transforms it into the monumental sculpture of a drawing, using iron rods for the pencil lines. Through this transformation, the banal act of washing dishes is abstracted, dealing with the idea of labour itself.
IVAN MELNYCHUK AND OLEKSANDR BURLAKA were both born 1982 in Kyiv, Ukraine, where they currently live and work. They are architects, members of the Grupa predmetiv group, who specialize in documenting and studying urban transformations. Burlaka is also a member of the Hudrada curatorial association and was a researcher for the exhibition project Trespassing Modernities, SALT Galata, Istanbul. Both artists are participants in the art programme Bergen Assembly 2013.

Melnychuk-Burlaka Group

Ivan Melnychuk and Oleksandr Burlaka's practice is a critical reflection on how the architectural heritage and the urban context in the post-Soviet space are transformed in, and sometimes erased from, our collective memory. Trained as architects they question and study the role, ideology and responsibility of architects today.

For PAC, Melnychuk and Burlaka present a number of real, unfinished or utopian architectural projects from the urban context of Kyiv. These projects aim to develop the city as a commercial space where architects abandon their responsibility and only function to execute the wish of the client. The complete work functions a manifest for the accountability of the architect towards the city as living environment and heritage.
Open Group

OPEN GROUP was founded in Lviv in 2012 by five Ukrainian artists: Yuriy Biley (born 1988 in Uzhgorod), Anton Varga (born 1989 in Uzhgorod), Pavlo Kovach (born 1987 in Uzhgorod), Yevgen Samborsky (born 1984 in Ivano-Frankivsk), Stanislav Turina (born 1988 in Makeevka in the Donetsk region). Over the past year, they have participated in several exhibitions including the Lviv Biennale and the Krendents festival in Vinogradiv.

In a process of building temporal, open “galleries” in public places, Open Group creates space, both physical and psychological, to engage artistic discourse and question the gallery as a curated and/or commercial space. Open Group consists of five founding members but continuously invites “anyone” to join the group and contribute to its artistic output.

For PAC, Open Group will present a special project continuing their practice of an open and continuous discourse, questioning the position and relation between the viewer, the artist and the work.
Synchrodogs

SYNCHRODOGS (formed in 2008) is an artist group of the two Ukrainian photographers Tania Shcheglova (born 1989 in Ivano-Frankivsk) and Roman Noven (born 1984 in Lutsk). They were winners of Harper’s Bazaar’s art photography award for Ukraine (2011), the first prize in the Art Rebels x Canon photo contest, Denmark, and the FOAM Construct competition Netherlands (both 2012). They have extensively exhibited in solo and group shows worldwide.

UNTITLED, 2013, from the series “Animalism, Naturalism”, photographs

Tania Shcheglova and Roman Noven travel around Ukraine, realizing different photographic series that deal with the presence of the human body within undisturbed nature. In their work they represent framed landscapes as abstracted and sublimated places disrupted by the introduction of a self-portrait into the image. These self-portraits are often reduced to a body with a continually transforming skin, strangely absorbed but alienated from its natural background.

For PAC, Synchrodogs have travelled to Iceland, continuing their practice of playful discovering, framing, disrupting and capturing sublime natural environments in their staged photographs.
Lynette Yiadom-Boakye was awarded the main prize of the Future Generation Art Prize 2012 for her extraordinary paintings and her complex artistic practice, which extends far beyond painting. After showing her works in Kyiv and at the Venice Biennale 2013, she has now been selected for the Turner Prize, which opens in October. PinchukArtCentre is very proud to premiere a new series of Yiadom-Boakye’s paintings in her first solo exhibition in Eastern Europe.

“Born in London in 1977 from African Diaspora parents, Yiadom-Boakye bases her painting practice on specific rules of duration and activity. She creates one canvas per day and if not completed by the end of the day, the painting is discarded. Therefore, there is no nocturnal rethinking, no pentimenti possible in her activity. Her works are organized around groups of paintings that generally portray imaginary black characters in abstract landscapes. From the dark atmosphere, striking usages of white paint become present like piercing flashes of light from a striped t-shirt or from the eyes of a character.

Her paintings do not emerge from a photographic imaginary but from the memory of figuration in the history of painting including realism with social consciousness and expressionism. Her works thus do not focus on the unique artwork but provide a viewing experience based on a different temporality, and on the recognition of recurring motifs, figures and moods. Her work thus hovers between a suspended duration, on the one hand, and an acute sense of the painterly act embedded in the present, on the other interpretation.”

Lynette Yiadom-Boakye in conversation with Björn Geldhof

If a painting of yours is not finished within a day, it gets rejected. How did you come to define your work as an act limited in time?

Initially it was a practical consideration because of the way I wanted to work. To leave the painting unfinished and come back to it was difficult due to the application of paint itself. Part of the work would dry and form a skin which was hard to get back into. But even more than that the fast process suits the way I think. If something isn’t working, I reject it quickly and move on. I’m quite restless and impatient when it comes to action of any kind. I like to make a decision and stick with it. When I’m indecisive, the work tends to go wrong. Also I like to think of one work leading to another, setting up a dialogue of sorts between paintings. I don’t like to get too precious about one work, but rather to think and read across a body or series or sub-grouping of works.

This brings us to the fact that your paintings need not necessarily be seen as individual works but rather gain meaning when taken as a series or part of a flow.

NOBLE AGGRESSIVES, 2012, oil on canvas, 200 x 160 cm (top right)
METAPHYSIC, 2012, oil on canvas, 200 x 250 cm (bottom)
Exactly, I didn’t like the idea of trying to imbue one painting with everything. My head is filled with any number of preoccupations when I’m working. All of these things affect the work, many of these things are difficult to describe, intuition, if you will. Other things are easy to describe but not particularly useful reference points to anyone but me. I think that is how most artists think: with their heads, their senses, their hands and a few other body parts. My thoughts are better organized in the manner of writing, words make up a sentence, sentences make up a paragraph etc. There isn’t always a lot of information in one painting, so the narrative is unclear.

One of the things often discussed in connection to your work is a sort of unspoken narrative which still is present in the combination of different paintings.

Yes, the narrative in my very early work, when I was in college about twelve years ago, was always very clear. It was very much about story-telling in a very literal sense. There were things happening and it was very obvious what was happening. Now I try to spread that narrative across works. Subjects, themes and ideas recur, both in terms of what is painted and how it is painted.

Is there a political context playing a role in your work?

Always. But I think that’s the case for almost everyone in one way or another. For me, painting itself is politicized, but it is normally the fact that there are black figures in the work which leads to questions about politics. I can understand that, though I don’t necessarily embrace it. Black people aren’t exotic or strange to me. Quite the opposite, actually. The politics that concern me have much more to do with that than anything else.
Where There Is a Will, There Is a Way

At the occasion of the 10th anniversary of the Elena Pinchuk ANTIAIDS Foundation, the PinchukArtCentre and ANTIAIDS Foundation collaborate on a Where There Is a Will, There Is a Way, a special exhibition project that focuses on HIV/AIDS and contemporary art.

The exhibition at the PinchukArtCentre will include works by Ai Weiwei, Sergiy Bratkov, Ilya Chichkan, Nan Goldin, Félix González-Torres and Damien Hirst. Together with the exhibition, a special outside project will be launched throughout the city of Kyiv with a specially produced new outside projection by Tony Oursler and two billboard projects, one by Barbara Kruger and one by Félix González-Torres.

Elena Pinchuk ANTIAIDS Foundation is celebrating its 10th anniversary in 2013. The foundation is renowned both in Ukraine and internationally for its innovative and interactive projects which give voice to the fight against AIDS in Ukraine.

Since the first public television campaign, “Stop AIDS before it stops us” launched in 2003, more than 20 PSAs have been broadcast on leading Ukrainian TV channels with the estimated commercial value exceeding 80 million US dollars. Through these media campaigns, ANTIAIDS succeeded in reaching a maximal coverage of Ukrainian audiences all over the country, resulting in a dramatic attitude change towards AIDS and people living with HIV.

The most memorable awareness projects of the ANTIAIDS Foundation up to date have been the largest concerts in the history of Ukraine, all free of charge for the public, presenting Sir Elton John in Kyiv (2007), Queen and Paul Rodgers in Kharkov (2008) and Sir Elton John with Queen + Adam Lambert on the eve of EURO 2012 in Kyiv.
Through these concerts Ukraine stood up against AIDS and the stigma and discrimination of people with HIV. All concerts gathered hundreds of thousands of people on the streets and millions watched the live broadcasts on Ukrainian TV channels.

Aside from this, the foundation provides assistance to medical entities, hospitals and orphanages where HIV-positive children live. Five mobile clinics that assist HIV-positive children in remote regions of Ukraine operate under the support of the foundation. During charity auctions, Fashion AID shows with Ukrainian designers and fundraising projects, more than 4 million dollars were raised to reconstruct two orphanages, an AIDS hospital and a maternity house, and to launch a mobile hospital project for HIV-positive children.

To bring the best international experience in the fight against AIDS to Ukraine, Elena Pinchuk ANTI-AIDS Foundation works with the Clinton Foundation on universal access for HIV/AIDS treatment, doctors’ mentoring, access to testing and substitutions therapy. A joint project of ANTIAIDS Foundation and the Elton John AIDS Foundation has found families for hundreds HIV-positive orphans, introduced models of diagnosis disclosure, trained thousands of teachers about HIV/AIDS and ways of transmission, helped thousands of families to deal with HIV and provided thousands of street girls with information and material aid.

According to the official data, in 2012 for the first time in the history of the AIDS epidemic in Ukraine, the number of new cases of HIV infection has dropped as a result of massive information campaigns conducted by the foundation and work of local and international partners and the government.

In Focus: Juergen Teller, Kiev, 2007

“On arriving in Kyiv in 2007, London-based photographer Juergen Teller found the Ukrainian capital at its pre-recession best: posh cars, leggy girls and lust for money in the air next to vast social instability, shaggy outskirts and post-Soviet cultural amnesia. Focusing on questions of the objectification of women, he constructed an explosive narrative of documentary shots from Kyiv streets, pseudo-home erotica with first Ukrainian playmate of the year Alena Fisunenko and a trashy fashion shoot with Dutch top model Lara Stone. His heroines, despite being of diverse backgrounds and appearances, were equalized by the post-soviet neoliberal reality. As Ingeborg Harms has written: “The resulting photo not only uncovers the pubescent fantasma of luxury intoxication, but also morphs the glittering shine of Kiev into a quiet, oppressive clearing, where this Miss Ukraine is no more at home than an astronaut in space.” Maria Lanko

Collection Platform 4 is a group exhibition offering a selective view on two central and sometimes opposed notions in our lives: emotion and technology. “It is hardly surprising that such an impressive introduction to the Chinese art scene is not being displayed in Beijing. That it is to be found in Kiev, however, is perhaps equally unexpected. Eleven Chinese artists have provided installations for the exhibit at the PinchukArtCentre, with more than half of them presenting brand new works. Taken together, they are a striking journey through the cutting edge of contemporary Chinese art, proving it has a depth well beyond the well-known works of Ai Weiwei.” Shaun Walker, The Independent
“At a biennale, one often must go everywhere to find one good object. But here, the curator has grouped together really exciting works from different countries. This is a very diverse and important show.” Rachel Campbell-Johnston quoted by Oksana Mamchenkova, Korrespondent

“If I had to pick just one thing to see in Venice this year, it would be this show.” Sarah Hyde, Here and Elsewhere
